The Need for Scholarships

High levels of poverty amongst American Indians often make a college education unattainable. The average cost of attendance at a tribal college is $13,285 for 2010-11 (including tuition, room, board, transportation, and books, averaged across institutions. Source: American Indian Higher Education Consortium). This contrasts with the low average per capita income on an Indian reservation of $8,000 (Source: U.S. Census Bureau).

The poverty rate amongst American Indians was 47% on reservations (Source: U.S. Census Bureau), the highest of any racial or ethnic group in America, and on some Indian reservations poverty rates reached as high as 60%. The hardship of paying for a college education when faced with poverty is even greater when one considers that 58% of our scholarship recipients have dependents. With your help, the American Indian College Fund works to improve our students' lives and end poverty through education.
